

The Inward Journey

Vedic Cycle Concepts & The Architecture of Supreme Consciousness.

One Destination. Many Paths.

A Shared Destination Across Traditions

External World
(Prakriti)

Supreme State
(Purusha)

Moving inward demands rendering all physical and mental activities (Prakriti) entirely inactive. This systematic withdrawal of the senses is the only mechanism to reach the pure, non-dual bliss of Purusha.

The Yoga Lens: Ascending the Spine

Crown (Destination): Sahasrāra. Located within the brain; suffused with radiant light and pure bliss.

Intermediate Stations:
Svādhiṣṭhāna (reproductive),
Maṇipūra (navel),
Anāhata (heart),
Viśuddhi (throat),
Ājñā (brow).

Base (Starting Point): Mūlādhāra.
The waking state; full control over the physical body.

The Vedic Lens: Ascending the Realms

Two Metaphors, One Ascent

Whether viewed through the somatic lens of physical energy centers or the cosmological lens of universal realms, the stages mark the exact same progressive inward withdrawal of consciousness.

Granularity of the Path: Sankhya & Tantra

The path isn't longer; the resolution is higher. The perspective simply changes based on the depth from which the journey is viewed.

Sankhya (24 Principles): Maps the primordial elements (Earth, Water, Fire, Air, Space) up through Mind, Intellect, Ego, and Mahat.

Tantra (36 Principles): Takes the 24 Sankhya principles and adds 12 subtle, highly granular states of dissolving space, time, and self.

The First Step: Pratyahara

Have you ever been so deeply absorbed in thought that you completely failed to hear someone speaking to you?

This ordinary phenomenon is a partial disconnection of the brain from the senses. Yoga science systematizes this into Pratyahara—achieving complete sensory disconnection intentionally as the first true step of meditation.

Tripuṭī: The Triad of Waking Reality

In the ordinary waking state, every human experience is fractured into three completely separate components. The subject, the object, and the action linking them remain fundamentally distinct.

The Advaita Experience: Ultimate Dissolution

In the supreme state of Turiya, the Tripuṭī dissolves entirely. The boundary between the experiencer and the experience vanishes.

The fractured perception of 'I see light' collapses into the non-dual reality of 'I am light.' This unity is the singular destination of all Indian traditions.

Tradition	Number of Stages	Starting Point / Metaphor	Destination
Yoga	7 Chakras	Mūlādhāra (Physical Energy Centers)	Sahasrāra (Crown/Bliss)
Veda	7 Lokas	Bhū (Cosmic Realms of Existence)	Satyam (Ultimate Truth)
Sankhya	24 Principles	Primordial Elements to Intellect	Mahat / Purusha
Tantra	36 Principles	24 Sankhya + 12 Subtle States	Supreme Unity

Sacred Geometry of Ascent: Key Concepts

Mūlādhāra

The root. The base of the spine and the starting point of the inward journey where full physical control exists.

Sahasrāra

The thousand-petaled lotus. The highest chakra at the crown of the head; the physical location of the Turiya state.

Tripuṭī

The triad of existence. The fractured waking state comprising the knower, the known, and the act of knowing.

Mahāḥ

The pivotal fourth Vedic loka. Existing just beyond the physical trio of Earth, Wind, and Sun, representing the transition into the supreme state.

The Inward Shift: Daily Practice

1. Somatic Focus

Sit quietly. Slowly trace your attention up the spine from the root (Mūlādhāra) to the crown (Sahasrāra). Observe the changing sensations as focus moves inward.

2. Conceptual Auditing

The Vedic path spans from Bhū (gross materiality) to Satyam (ultimate truth). Where on this spectrum does your daily focus currently reside?

3. Imaginative Dissolution

Recall the triad: 'I see light'. Now, close your eyes and attempt to visualize the dissolved boundary of Tripuṭī: 'I am light'.

Beyond the Fourth State: Advanced Horizons

The architecture of supreme consciousness extends deeper into specialized texts.
Upcoming explorations include:

- The Patanjali Yoga Sutras (Stages of Samadhi: Savichara, Nirvichara, Sabija, Nirbija).
- The Sankhya Karika and Chapter 7 of the Bhagavad Gita.
- Deep-dives into Vedic loka concepts via the Taittiriya Aranyaka and Brihaddevata.

Turīya.

Supreme bliss — the non-dual experience.
