

Completion of Inner Cycles

Navigating the Waking-Samadhi Cycle through Atmaguna and Dharma.

The Qualities of Sleep in the Waking State

The Disturbances

- Bright lights

- Loud noises from neighbours

- A cold water sprinkle

- Ringing doorbell

The Enablers

- A heavy voice

- Soft murmurs

- Slow movements

- Drowsiness

The things that help us return to sleep are the very qualities of sleep itself, persisting in the waking state.

Atmaguna: The Bridge Between States

Waking State
Manifest

Atmaguna are the inherent qualities of the Self.

Even though these qualities appear in the waking state, carefully preserving them creates a natural sequence that facilitates re-entry into unlimited bliss.

Samadhi
Unmanifest /
Self-Bliss

Preserving these outward expressions completes the inner cycle.

Redefining the Architecture of Dharma

Root 'dhr'
(to uphold)

Preserving
Atmaguna

= DHARMA

Dharma is not merely a set of rules. It is the active enabling of the waking-samadhi cycle, ensuring the provision of sensory and beyond-sensory joy to all.

The Cycle of Inner Completion

Waking State

Jāgrat — Senses active, ordinary life

Yoga Practice

Pratyahara → Dhyana (Unmanifest half-cycle)

Samadhi

Unlimited bliss, Chitta vritti nirodha

Manifest Half-Cycle

Vyakta — Samadhi manifested in waking state

A Self-Sustaining Cycle:
The manifest prepares
the fertile ground for the unmanifest.

Three Tools for Manifesting Samadhi

1. Atmaguna

Preserving the qualities of the Self as living dharma.

Virtues enacted in the waking world.

2. Mantra

Vocal patterns and chanting that act as an auditory anchor for re-entry into the unmanifest state.

3. Mudra

The physical body language of inwardness. Postures that align the physical frame with deep rest.

Protecting these outward expressions in the waking state makes re-entry into samadhi easier.

Living Atmaguna: The Legend of Raghu and Kaustsa

1. The Request

Kaustsa, proficient in 14 Vidyas, seeks to pay his Guru. The Guru demands exactly 14 heaps of gold.

3. The Shower of Wealth

Recognizing the King's sheer virtue and readiness to fight for the gold, Kubera preemptively showers gold coins.

2. The Empty Treasury

Kaustsa approaches King Raghu, but the King has just distributed all his wealth in a Vishvajit yajna.

4. The Refusal

Kaustsa takes only his exact due of 14 heaps. King Raghu steadfastly refuses to keep a single coin of the surplus.

Diagnosing the Virtues

	Kaustsa	King Raghu
Akarpanyam (Not keeping for oneself)	✓ Took only necessary amount	✓ Kept none of the Kubera wealth
Anasuya (Absence of envy)	✓ No envy of King's generosity
Anayasa (Calmness / No exertion)	✓ Calm decision to return initially
Agraha (Absence of excessive desire)		✓ No desire for the surplus gold
Mangalam (Working for welfare)		✓ Working purely for Kaustsa's welfare

"Atmagunah are living dharma—not just rules in a book."

Inter-Personal Cycles and the Ripple Effect

One person's manifest state directly creates an unmanifest state in another person. Our inner cycles are deeply interwoven.

Person A
(Manifest State)
A student is tired, stretches, and yawns openly.

Person B
(Unmanifest State)
Experiences spontaneous fatigue, sleepiness, and also yawns.

The Connective Pathways

Pathways of the Jnani

Integration: Experience It Yourself

The Inter-Personal Audit

Observe for one week. How do the mental states of happy vs. restless people affect you? Witness the inter-personal connection of cycles daily.

The Bedtime Cycle

Create a routine: One mantra, one upright mudra, one recall of an atmaguna. Observe your sleep and waking state after eight days.

The Narrative Reflection

Actively identify the 8 atmagunah displayed in the daily actions of the people around you, just as we did with King Raghu and Kaustsa.

Between the unmanifest and manifest lies a natural sequence.
Preserving our inner qualities is not just an act of self-care—
it is the ultimate act of Dharma.
